LEWIS AND CLARK EXPEDITION (part 2)

1. Lewis and Clark's route took them up the Missouri River, across the Rockies, and along the Columbia and other rivers to the Pacific Ocean and back, a total of about 8,000 miles. They arrived back in St. Louis in September 1806 after almost two and a half years. Their friends, families, and even President Jefferson feared they were dead. 2. Sacagawea (or Sacajawea) was a Shoshone Indian who interpreted for the corps. She was the teenaged wife of a French-Canadian trader who joined Lewis and Clark as a guide in November, 1804, when the expedition reached Indian villages and set up camp in what is now North Dakota. 3. York was Clark's slave, who became the first black man to cross the continent north of Mexico. 4. Only one man died, Sgt. Charles Floyd, due to a burst appendix. He was buried at what is now Sioux City, Iowa. 5. Lewis, who was once Thomas Jefferson's personal secretary, suffered from depression and alcoholism, and committed suicide in 1809. While the routes of this expedition were much too difficult for use by emigrants in wagons, the mapping did prove immensely useful for future westward travel.

Lou Boyd once noted that people who don't play bridge don't understand its drawing power. In Chicago once, 26,000 people showed up to watch a bridge tournament! He also stated that the most widely used objects of diversion in the world are ... playing cards. If a country has paper, its people have playing cards.
